

MARKET INSIGHT

"The time has come", the Walrus said, "To talk of many things: Of shoes - and ships - and sealing wax - Of cabbages - and kings - And why the sea is boiling hot - And whether pigs have wings."

- The Walrus and the Carpenter, Lewis Carroll

Not wanting to compare my age frame to that of a walrus, I nonetheless do think the time has come "to talk of many things", so here are some core facts and issues I think worthy of note:

- Markets continue to make headway and have had an almost unprecedented bull run since April 2009 when TAM wrote its note, "The Green Shoots of Recovery".
- The headlines continue to suggest fear and problems in the political arena (i.e. Mr Trump and Mrs May).
- Somewhat extended (but not disastrously so) equity valuations, particularly in the US.
- Low, and as yet to be normalised, interest rates in Europe and the UK, although the US is trying.
- Low global inflation, but which is picking up.
- Brexit - for the UK it's what, how, when and even who?
- The possibility of an early Italian election with anti EU, populist parties competing, neck and neck in the polls with centralist parties.
- China – good, bad or just plain ugly?

In short, markets are continuing to ignore some fairly key issues as they have done for some time now and in which, so far, we have been happy to participate. But with it presently being the cheapest ever time to hedge against a market catastrophe by buying options, short of 2007 (pre-financial crisis) levels, are things not overly optimistic within the financial system?

So what is going on?

It would appear that the markets are “talking bearish but acting bullish”. Even today I could not find a positive article amongst a swathe of negative comments - not that good news sells papers of course. Now I haven't seen this mix of bearish rhetoric but bullish financial positioning for a very long time. We have had almost 18 months of uninterrupted gains, without any serious, or even temporary setback. Unusual to say the least.

It may be the prudent thing here for TAM to pare back equities a little and sit out the summer with just a little more defensive positioning than normal. I personally fail to see the momentum drivers in the short-term (over the summer) and with everyone seemingly talking bearish but indisputably acting bullish, and with the summer holiday period ahead, discretion just for a while may be the better part of valour?

We should be aware that it's not all over, the bull market does not necessarily end here. The markets have now discarded Trump's ability to get anything done, so he only needs to get through an element of his tax cuts, stimuli or have a win or two in Congress, and markets will be positive - they will take anything at this point! The European theatre is a positive place to be at present, with much more stable politics and the emergence from the doldrums of the post-financial crisis era.

However, a normalised setback (if there is such a thing) is now well overdue. The tech rout of the past few days (most will have side-stepped that one) may just be a portend of the sea bubbling up and for now, maybe pigs do have wings?

Now what does this all mean for our clients' portfolios?

This is simple. TAM is looking to reduce its overweight equity position and even considering underweighting equities during the summer, to keep some powder dry.

TAM ASSET MANAGEMENT

 City Tower, 40 Basinghall Street, London, EC2V 5DE  +44 (0) 207 549 7650  +44 (0) 207 549 7784  www.tamassetmanagement.com

wealthfinance2016
fundmanager elite
Best Investment Management Services 2016

i-invest
2016 ASSET MANAGER AWARDS
UK Asset Manager of the Year

finance awards
two thousand & fifteen
Award for Innovation in Portfolio Management - UK

INVESTMENT WEEK
Sustainable Investment Awards 2015
FINALIST

INVESTMENT WEEK
Sustainable Investment Awards 2014
FINALIST